

Central Illinois Builders Is ...

... A voluntary trade association founded in 1955 with the initial purpose and primary focus of representing construction management in labor relations and contract negotiations.

Central Illinois Builders is a local chapter of the Associated General Contractors of America (AGC). Established in 1918, AGC is a full service construction association with 95 chapters nationwide.

Chartered by AGC in 1956, Central Illinois Builders' jurisdiction is building construction in 46 counties of central Illinois. The policies and direction of Central Illinois Builders are determined by a twenty-one member Board of Directors. The Board is elected at the Annual Meeting of the Association. Central Illinois Builders has four active committees (Labor Policy being one such committee). Committee recommendations are acted upon by the Board and are the basis for much of the Association's policy and direction. Chapter staff administer the policy and direction as determined by the Board and its Executive Committee. Membership in CIB is available to any firm whose livelihood is wholly or in part derived from the construction industry. Three membership classifications (Regular, Specialty and Associate) are available. Please call the CIB Office for further details.

Local Labor Policies Have a Tremendous Effect on Your Company's Operation

As a union contractor, the relationship between your company and local unions is a critical element to your success. Central Illinois Builders' primary purpose when founded over 60 years ago was to organize local contractors into a single unified voice that would provide a more effective ability to negotiate with local unions. By all accounts, CIB has been successful in that endeavor. In most instances, the CIB negotiated building construction agreement serves as the "local agreement" that you are asked to sign.

There is mutual benefit to the bargaining relationship between local trade associations and unions. For the unions, negotiating with a trade association prevents them from having to deal with each company on an individual basis, which would be incredibly time consuming. Furthermore, it is beneficial to the construction companies to be unified with their peers. This mutually beneficial relationship ensures uniformity in working conditions and wages, which in turn ensures a competitive, level playing field for all firms.

How the Process Works

CIB will assign peer contractors to serve as bargaining representatives for each of the collective bargaining agreements that CIB negotiates. While the process of negotiating is never easy and seldom predictable, at some point, the two sides will reach a tentative agreement will reach a tentative agreement. CIB staff will summarize the tentative agreement and send those participating companies a ballot asking for acceptance or rejection. Fifty-one percent of those companies who assigned bargaining rights for that particular trade must accept. If there is less than fifty-one percent voting for acceptance, CIB's committee will go back to the bargaining table and continue to meet with the union's until another tentative agreement is reached.

What is the Benefit To Your Company?

Labor issues and the occasional disputes that go with them can be complex matters. These issues can be a drain on your time, your emotional reactions, public relations and relations with other contractors. Furthermore, labor disputes can quickly become complex legal issues that threaten the vitality of your business and livelihood. By assigning your bargaining rights to CIB, you have the opportunity to more fully participate in the local labor relations process, as well as having access to the knowledge and experience of CIB's Labor Policy Committee and staff.

How Do You Participate?

You DO NOT need to be (or become) a member to participate in the process. However, you will need to contact the CIB Office. A simple phone call or email will do. CIB will request some basic information about your company via an Assignment of Bargaining Rights Form. This form will request basic information about your company. This form will also list the various trade unions with whom CIB has a collective bargaining agreement. You should place your initials in the space provided next to those unions with whom you wish to be signatory. Please read these documents carefully and be certain that you understand how the process works. An Assignment of Bargaining Rights Form is a legally binding document with both unions and the association. Of course, you generally will have the option to terminate your bargaining rights assignment at some point in the future, but there are specific legal procedures as to how and when that can be accomplished. Once you have decided which unions that you wish to be signatory, return the form to the CIB Office. CIB will then forward this information to the specific unions that you have requested to be signatory.

Is There Any Cost To My Company?

There is no additional cost for assigning bargaining rights. The cost of negotiating and administering the local collective bargaining agreements is covered by the Industry Advancement Foundation. This is a contribution that is already included in the wage and benefit contributions that are negotiated in each agreement (currently 15 cents per hour). So why not have your opinions heard by the organization that helps set the terms and conditions that you work under every day? Make arrangements to be part of the group.
